When a woman is newly engaged, she loves to look at her diamond ring. She turns it this way and that way, looking at each facet to see its unique beauty. In the same way, Christians have the privilege of considering God in all of His fullness.

But while a woman can get to the end of the beauty of her ring, we cannot exhaust God. The older we get, the more we experience God's grace, love, and mercy. The more we study God's character in the Bible, the more we realize that we cannot get to the end of God in this life. And for all eternity, we will see more and more of His glory.

That is why the Psalmist calls us to praise God, "according to his excellent greatness!" (v. 150:2b). The idea is that our God is great, and He deserves great praise. Our thoughts of God cannot be too high. We cannot praise God too much. As Matthew Henry says, the danger is completely on the other side — of saying too little. Today, with full hearts, let's praise the Lord.
