

Reroute

JOSH TURNER

Several years ago, our family packed the truck and headed across the country to visit the West. When we were in New Mexico, one of my daughters had to go to the restroom, so we stopped at a pull off in the middle of the desert. When we were ready to get back on the road, the truck wouldn't start. Eventually, our trip was rerouted to a mechanic in Albuquerque for a new fuel pump and $1,000 was deducted from my bank account. We can expect that no matter what kind of trip we go on, there will be some rerouting. That's why I love my GPS. No matter what direction I take, it will direct me to arrive at the desired destination.

Life doesn't always work out quite like we thought, and we need to reroute. Maybe you've been living a life only for yourself and today you want to begin a relationship with Jesus. Or perhaps, like Jonah, you already have a relationship with God, but you've been going in the opposite direction, and you need to reroute. In the end, Jonah was exactly where God wanted him to be.
